His Lordship-You see there was no notice that an appeal had been made. The letter of the 26th May only threatens an appeal Mr. Deacon-The letter states positively, my Lord, that he is going to appeal. It is not in any way problematical or doubtful

Mr. Johnson said the Ordinance was quite olear. It gave the jurisdiction under which the appeals were to be made, and he thought it dosirable in practice that the requirements of these sections should be strictly adhered to. The Ordinance required that a notice of appeal stating fully the grounds on which the appeal was made should be served on the assessor. That had not been done. There was the correspondence previous to the appeal being made stating the grounds of dissatisfaction, and there was the last letter, in which the appellant said, as you insist on so and so we intend to appeal. could not be said to be a notice of appeal. There was nothing to show that afterwards be might not have changed his mind on the matter. After the appeal has been made the assessor must receive a notice stating the grounds of appeal. A notice previous to that was of no use. notice after the appeal was made was binding on the appellant, and thus the assessor knew what objections he had to meet. As it was the appellant did not really know what were the grounds for appeal in this case. In the other case which was before his Lordship last time and which had since been withdrawn the appellants went much further than in this case. Although no direct notice was served on the assessor note was written which though not a copy was to the same effect as that in which the appeal was made. If that case had come before his Lordship he (Mr. Johnson) could not have said that they did not know the grounds of appeal. although there had not been strict compliance with the Ordinance. His Lordship said that as far as he could see he thought the want of notice must be fatal t this appeal. The matter had been fully discussed in a previous case, which he had looked up, in which there had been a failure to give notice and the court held that the appeal must be set aside on that technical ground. As he had said before, he did not like to dismiss a case on a mere technicality when the requirements of the Ordinance had been substantially complied with. but he did not see how this section could be go over. No real notice of appeal had been given Appellant in his letter of the 26th stated that he intended to appeal on the grounds previously stated in a former letter. Here he stated that that have changed his mind and not have ap-well: I was not an object of disgust to the dog. But the ceachman was startled, when he saw me again. He said something, I did not know what it was; and he produced a pocket-flask, containing some spirits, I suppose. Perhaps he thought I was going to faint. He little knew me. I told him to drive back to the place at which I had hired the cab, and carn his money. Ho earned it. On getting home, I found Mrs. Tenbruggen walking up and down the dining room, deep in thought. She was startled when we first confronted each other. "You look dreadfully ill," she said. I answered that I had been out for a little exercise, and had over-fatigued myself; and then changed the subject. " Does my father seem to improve under your treatment?" I asked. "Very far from it, my dear. I promised that I would try what Massage would do for him, and I find myself compelled to give it up

Again and again, I read that remarkable atory of the intended poisoning, and of the manuer in which it had ended. I sat thinking over this romance in real life, till I was interrupted by the announcement

Mr. Philip Dunboyne had returned. In Miss Jillgall's absence we were alone at the table. My appetite was gone. I made a pretence of eating, and another protonce of being glad to see my devoted lover. I talked to him in the prettiest manner. As a hypocrite, he thoroughly matched me: he was gallant, he was amusing. If baseness like ours had been punishable by the law, a pri-
